1. An effort was made to contact subject shortly after receipt of Reference A dispatch. Information available here gave only subject's Paris address, but did suggest that he might have an additional address in Germany. We regret the considerable loss of time required to locate subject in Germany and our resultant long overdue response to Reference A.
2. Subject is currently employed as the Technical Director of Bayerische Motoren Werke Triebwerke GmbH in Muenchen-Alach. He was recently contacted by [] and a report of this contact was transmitted by Reference B.
3. During a detailed discussion of guided missiles held with subject, he stated directly that he had no personal knowledge of Soviet guided missile research. The only information he provided regarding Soviet work was a personal opinion regarding Soviet rocket fuel. He stated that he and several of his workers during World War II had developed a type of rocket propellant that was far superior to "conventional fuel", but that the political power of Werner von Braun and his associates had prevented a consideration of this propellant. He believes (apparently without any direct information) that the Soviets are now using propellants of the type he and his associates developed. The combination he considers best consists of highly concentrated peroxide or nitric acid with "self-reacting" kerosene.
4. As it appears that subject has no direct access to Soviet guided missile information, no further contact is planned at this time.
